FUND COMMENTARY

After a challenging 2022, your portfolio rebounded nicely in the early months of 2023, supported by a combination of factors. First, inflation globally is coming down as commodity prices cool and supply chain constraints ease. While it is still too early to cry victory (core inflation remains stubbornly high), the picture appears rosier than it was three months ago, which is also encouraging for the future path of interest rates. Second, the economic outlook has improved. Lower European gas prices combined with surprisingly resilient households and corporates have led the European Central Bank to raise its forecasts for 2023, no longer expecting a recession. Finally, your portfolio had a strong full-year results season, confirming 2022 as one of the strongest years for growth in the strategy's history. From a relative standpoint, your portfolio outperformed not only the MSCI Europe index thanks to the clear absence of banking stocks, but also the S&P Europe 350 Shariah index. We continue to focus on holding high quality businesses with low macro sensitivity and high degrees of differentiation and thus pricing power, as we continue to believe that over the long run it is these businesses that will thrive over the course of the economic cycle.

The earnings season confirmed 2022 as one of the portfolio's strongest years from a fundamental perspective. In aggregate, the companies delivered double-digit organic sales growth and mid-teens earnings growth in local currencies. Pricing power, high (gross) margins and good cost management were critical factors in this delivery.

ASML and Novo Nordisk, the portfolio's two largest holdings, were the top contributors to performance in the quarter. ASML ended 2022 strongly and its 2023 guidance of more than 25% revenue growth, despite weakness in the semiconductor market, underscores the structural nature of its customers' investments. Shares in Novo Nordisk continued their upward trajectory, buoyed by strong full-year results (sales and operating profit up to the mid-teens) and continued good momentum in its GLP-1 and obesity franchises. Wegovy, its once weekly injectable anti-obesity product, continues to enjoy strong momentum as one major market after another moves quickly to approve it.

Among the detractors to performance, shares in Sartorius Stedim fell as the company digests a strong period of Covid supported growth and following the announcement of a somewhat expensive acquisition of Polyplus, a manufacturer of reagents and plasmids used in cell and gene therapy. Roche shares also retreated as the company delivered a slight increase in 2022 profits and indicated that it expects a slight decrease in 2023 group sales due to the sharp decline in sales of Covid-19 products.

We have continued to build stakes in high quality, fast growing companies when opportunities present themselves, which this quarter included the provider of architectural design software Nemetschek. The markets remain highly sensitive to macro-news flow and we intend to remain patient, taking advantage of buying opportunities if and when they arise.

Turning to the future, while companies remain prudent, they are not holding back on their investments. Indeed, some are accelerating them, seeing the current environment as an opportunity to cement their leadership positions. Lonza announced a further increase in CapEx for 2023 as the company builds out new manufacturing capacity. Inditex intends to increase spending in the coming year as it accelerates space expansion, while also rolling out new in-store innovations. At the same time, company CEOs are prudent and while demand remains robust for now, they are preparing for the worst. In addition, many companies have put in place detailed contingency plans should demand weaken.

Looking further out, we are confident the portfolio is well positioned to capture the long-term growth opportunities of the coming years. Digital investments have stepped up since Covid, and there are signs that growth will continue. The portfolio's holdings in ASML and Dassault Systèmes should be among those which look set to benefit. The next decade will see the remainder of the baby-boomer population retire, resulting in greater demand for healthcare products. The portfolio's holdings in the healthcare space, through pharmaceutical companies such as Novo Nordisk, its suppliers such as Sartorius Stedim and Lonza, or medical device companies such as Straumann, should see it well positioned. Finally, the transition to a green economy will create opportunities for those who can be solution providers, such as Sika and Kingspan in the construction space.

Markets are likely to remain volatile as investors react to news flow around inflation, interest rates and the economic outlook. This will create opportunities and we remain ready to pounce on them in order to continue building a high quality portfolio fit for the future.
